OVC TRIBAL GRANTEE SPOTLIGHTS

The Children's Justice Act (CJA) Partnership for Indian Communities initiative offers funding, technical assistance, and training to help American Indian and Alaska Native communities develop, establish, and operate programs designed to improve the investigation, prosecution, and handling of cases of child abuse and neglect, and particularly child sexual abuse cases, in a manner which lessens trauma for child victims.

Below are spotlights on two current CJA grantees with information about how their communities are benefitting from CJA awards.

Tribe: The Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin

Program: Menominee Family Services Program

Award: CJA Award #2020-V6-GX-0001

How is your Program currently using your OVC Children's Justice Act funds to support child victims of crime?

We have focused our attentions on virtual outreach. We have conducted many Zoom meetings with agencies and continue to conduct presentations in the community about children who are in need of support (booths, articles in newspaper, etc.). We have improved our assessments for families (trauma assessments) and continue to use them to help provide the best supports to children victims. We continue with "Lunch n Learns"—meetings with school staff addressing childhood trauma. Overall, we continue talking with families and do case planning with them.

In June 2020, the program took on the responsibility of enforcing the Children's Code. While there have been some issues with this transfer from the state of Wisconsin, the working relationship still exists and we are currently determining how this relationship will work in the future. Currently, our programs include Child Welfare, Protective Services, and ICWA. In the past few years, we have grown the program from 8 staff to 18 individuals who oversee resources that help our tribal families.

Family Services

Worker

What challenges have you faced in assisting child victims of crime?

Our program struggles with how to approach and interact with families who experience victimization in a trauma-informed way. Helping build long-term goals with families has been hard, especially balancing empathy while progressing the case plan. It can be a hard balancing act to pull off. We continue to work on improving our approach to working with families, especially since June 2020.

What recommendations do you have for others looking to develop or improve services to child victims of crime?

Identify what resources you have that can help you with families. Know what resources you have and use them to benefit child victims. Our program likes to analyze what our end goals are—what do we want to accomplish. From the end goal, we walk back through the objectives and figure out how we can be successful. Take the time to review your end results in advance to figure out how you can get through the daily grind.

"Our community has endured a lot of trauma. The opportunities provided through the CTAS award have allowed us to reach and inspire traumatized families and move them towards happy and healthy living."

Tribe: Fort Belknap Indian Community (Montana)
Program: Fort Belknap Social Services
Award: CJA Award #2018-V4-GX-0041

How is your Program currently using your OVC Children's Justice Act funds to support child victims of crime?

Our Social Services Program provides wrap-around services for victims of crime, focusing on youth up to age 18 and, in some cases, up to age 21. We support children and youth in high-risk situations, providing and connecting them with victim services, mental health services, and substance abuse recovery services.

We will open our Teen Safe House soon. We worked with our OVC Program Manager and TTA providers to adjust our budget and to develop our policies and procedures. Once those are approved, we will hire staff using our CJA funds to support the Teen program.

What challenges have you faced in assisting child victims of crime?

The pandemic and staff turnover have been the most significant challenges to our program. Only staff deemed essential are working due to continued pandemic lock-downs. It has been difficult to locate qualified staff to fill vacant positions, so our program has encouraged community members to pursue and complete degrees. Many have now received associate's degrees and are pursuing bachelor's degrees, building up our local pool of potential employees.

What recommendations do you have for others looking to develop or improve services to child victims of crime?

Focus first on meeting basic needs, such as shelter and food. Once those are met, program staff can help youth address victimization, mental health, and recovery needs. Consistency is key. Even if only one person shows up, you will see positive change if you keep putting in the effort.

"We are so grateful for the opportunity [CJA funding has provided] to build [our Programs]. With all the support we have from our OVC Grant Manager to our TTA provider, we have the ability to continue to grow."

PLANNING FOR SUSTAINABILITY, DIVERSIFYING FUNDING, AND WRITING COMPLEX GRANTS (OVC TTAC)

Victim serving organizations often struggle with fluctuating funding sources and levels of support. The first session in this series will explore two critical domains of sustainability planning—effective resource and partnership development—and will help participants apply strategies that build strong support for their programs, potentially leading to new funding opportunities. Participants will begin to create a diversified funding plan framework, which will include new approaches for expanding a potential donor/funder pool. The second session will explore the essential ingredients of complex grant applications: compelling statements of need, detailed budget justifications aligned with project goals and objectives, and quality outcome measures.
