OVC TRIBAL GRANTEE SPOTLIGHTS

Teens, young people 12-18 years of age, are victimized by crimes far more often than any other age group. Yet teens are the least likely to report their victimization. Service providers frequently struggle in their efforts to reach teen victims, to inform them of available services, and to provide age-appropriate support. This month the OVC Tribal Grantee Spotlights focus on two grantees who are developing best practices and implementing programs specifically designed for teen victims.

Tribe/Program: The Alaska Native Justice Center (ANJC)

Award: 2019, 2020, 2021 TVSSA

What approach did your Program take to develop/enhance and implement services for youth victims?

ANJC identified opportunities to expand and grow through the process of a needs assessment and strategic plan. Through this process ANJC had the support of our Training and Technical Assistance (TTA) provider, Fox Valley. As results of this process, ANJC has an opportunity to grow and be successful with many services available to youth and their families. ANJC has increased collaboration with community partners to help meet the needs of youth and their families and to work together, through direct services and referral sources in order to make a larger impact in the community. By gathering new ideas of how to better serve the community, we found an overwhelming theme of respondents looking for culturally appropriate methods to heal, such as community gatherings, talking circles, and arts and crafts. Our hope is that there can be improvement in the threats that have been identified such as high rates of trauma, lack of cultural/traditional healing and supportive services. Working in partnership with other community agencies allows us to leverage additional resources and provide more comprehensive services to our clients.

Marlene Mack
Assistant Director of Operations

What recommendations do you have for other Tribal Programs considering services in this area?

ANJC highly encourages grantees to take advantage of the resources that are available through the support of their training and technical assistance providers. We have felt welcomed, and do not hesitate to connect with our TTA Provider should we run into barriers, questions and input as we progress through our projects.

How has OVC funding and support helped develop and/or sustain this Program?

Collaboration is crucial when working with participants and are an important part of the holistic approach in addressing unmet needs. As a result of Covid-19, many of our participants and their families were left unemployed, with limited resources available such as day care, family parks and agencies closed their doors due to mandates. ANJC was able to financially assist our participants as long as they fit within the grant requirements.

The ANJC family continues to be flexible as we navigate through rotation of shifts and moving to a new space. Staff approached this with a positive attitude and I'm proud of the teams for coming together and working as a team.

Tribe: Nez Perce Tribe (Idaho)

Program: I'nit (Home) Teen Shelter Program

Award: 2019 TVSSA and 2020 CTAS Children's Justice Act

What are some things your Program considers when working with teen victims of crime?

We recognize that traumatized teens may not always act like teens.

They may present more as adults because that's the role they've played. Often these teens have taken on most of the responsibility for their own care, they've been desensitized to traumatic experiences, and they are really good at designing protection mechanisms for themselves.

So we work very hard to earn teens' trust. They are going to hold you to everything you say, so it's really important to follow through and do what you say you're going to do. We also spend a lot of time out in the community so teens get to know us and know we are people they can come to.

Who does your Program serve?

Our I'nit Teen Shelter Program serves youth who are direct victims of crime. This includes Minors in Need of Care (MINOCS) and Youth in Need of Services (YINS) as well as drop-in youth who need a safe place to go. We are in the final stages of completing work on our Shelter and are excited to get the facility up and running so teens have that safe place in our community.

I'nit Teen Shelter

What recommendations do you have for others looking to develop or improve services to teen victims of crime?

We know our culture and our Tribe. We are experts on being Indian. Implementing that knowledge into teen services can be very fun! Take teens hunting, gathering, and to the Long House.

Kids from hard places may not have had experience with traditions and ceremony. Inviting them to participate with their family is very empowering. There are lots of curriculums available to help incorporate culture into services, like White Bison, Daughter of Tradition, Native Wellness Institute, and Positive Indian Parenting. We also use the 5 Love Languages of Children and make it indigenous ourselves.
